INFORMATION SCIENCE FOR MANAGERS

The Office of Training announces another offering of the "Information Science for Managers" course. This one week, full-time, introductory level course covers new methodologies for Management and Intelligence.

The course is designed for managers, potential managers, supervisors, members of management staffs, and other senior and middle-level intelligence professionals with collection, production, support, operations, or management responsibilities in the intelligence field. It stresses the application of information systems and systematic methods of analysis by systems users to a variety of intelligence and management tasks. It is not designed for skilled systems specialists and the content of the course is readily understood by those with no scientific, technical or computer training.

Each student learns the elementary use of computer terminals and to apply computer programs to management and intelligence problems. He receives a fundamental knowledge of forecasting, probability, decision trees, correlation and regression analysis, network analysis, linear programming, resource allocation, PERT, decision-making, and other systematic methods of analysis.

OBJECTIVES:

1. To acquaint the student with the terminology and basic techniques of Management Science.
2. To identify capabilities, limitations, and applications of Systematic Methods of Analysis in management and intelligence.
